

Great Music - Great Graphics

We call LPs 'albums' because when 78s only contained one song per side, a collection of discs by the same artist were placed in sleeved portfolios like this, reminding everyone of a photo 'album.'

Edward "Kid" Ory was a French speaking - Louisiana born, highly influential jazz trombonist who came to prominence in the early 1900's. This album however is equally collectible for the cover art by Jim Flora that he created throughout the 1940s and 1950s. Incredibly entertaining, graphically fascinating, Flora created hundreds of distinctive covers for RCA and Columbia. Even Pearl Jam paid homage in this poster from 1998.

As to sleeves, the earliest were either a generic sleeve prompting the record label, an advertisement promoting the record store, or a catchy graphic to attract the attention of a consumer.

Perry — an ordinary and quite popular later-day crooner, this disc interesting in that the sleeve was used to keep track of sales: It nicely chronicles the short life of a pop song, originally selling 15 at a clip and soon down to only 1.

Step Back With one of the many novelty LPs—many dirty little ditties, ratty swing, saloon favorites, raqué selections and double entendres suitable for both perfors and bachelors.

While this Little Women children's record became an actual design length and low price pop product here, as performers. This one by the Farber Siblings for a "Sugar Daddy" orphan's plea. The 1944-45 1941 featured artists and music series of Children's record.

A hand-drawn sign for "FACE-O-MATIC" is hanging from a white string. The sign is a light beige rectangle with a black border, featuring a stylized television set graphic. The text "FACE-O-MATIC" is written in a bold, black, sans-serif font across the center. The sign is mounted on a blue, starburst-shaped background. The entire assembly is suspended by a white string against a blurred green background.
